The answer is yes and no. Yes because hiring a general contractor is a sure way of getting all the rehab work done when you are flipping a house. No because if the numbers don't work your house flipping project could be a huge flop. It's extremely hard to hire a general contractor to do the rehab work and still maintain the 70% rule

Sep 7, 2012 - This year in my Advanced Geometry class, we did a project on solids. The students had to create a 3D figure using at least one of each of the solids we discussed in class (Sphere, Cone, Cylinder, Prism, Pyramid). The projects were to be completed at home. On the due date, the students brought their projects
